>> GHOST RACING REPORT
By Acolyte Serena

First races of the month, and we ended with four players tied for first place so far! We also introduced an EVERYONE WINS! Race where those that had not won yet so far, got to race for small token amounts laid out just for them. They don't count in the standings, but you don't leave empty handed.

Winning two races each were Soltron, a Jack-O-Lantern and 60T, Huckleberry for 135T, ABE a skull and 60T and Piemur a voodoo doll and the third bowling pin (7 more to go!) Also winning prizes were Necrolyte Benny 75T, BigJohn won a fox head, Holger won 100T and winning assorted tokens were Magica Adara, Tsu-Sana-O and BigJohn among others.

Great racing all, and hope to see everyone again, every Monday at 5 PM WAT in front of Isle Caribe.

>> SEEN ON THE STREET
By Rosaleah

Was that Dallas Cat doing the Texas Two-Step in the Bar-L Bar the other night? I'm sure I saw Ophelia keeping time with her tail, when she wasn't eyeing Miss M's rope. I don't think it was because she was afraid of being tied up, just that it looked like the sort of thing she'd have fun unravelling. After all the excitement of the hoedown, though, Ophelia seems to have abandoned the barstool for her more usual haunts, keeping the storeroom free of mice and making sure that drinks spilled behind the bar are quickly lapped up before anyone slips and falls!

Have you noticed how healthy the plants in the Temple have been looking lately? Word has it that the Acolytes have been diligently watering and pruning them so that they always look their best, but we think that at least part of the credit for the striking beauty of the foliage should go to Necrolyte Jackal3, who's been heard speaking soothingly to them, encouraging them to grow straight and strong in honor of Morpheus. Way to go, Jackal! We're sure the plants appreciate the concern and the attention!

The other night when we thought we were talking to one of the Pandas about town, we discovered we'd actually run into a ferret! Indeed, he was a member of ferret royalty: Ali Quid, Ferret Prince. He asked me to relay word to the janitorial staff that some cleaning definitely needed to be done around the picture-window frames in the StarWay Cafe. He said he'd peeked behind them and found some stardust! He also left some food behind there for later, for someone to have a fit when they discover it, he explained, as well as for the exterminator to explain why there were ants. Ants! In the StarWay? Hey, those aren't ants, those are visitors from a faraway planet! Aren't they???

As the Rumor Mill churns: Is romance in the air as Ruby and Daniel remain an inseparable couple? And speaking of inseparable couples, it seems that wherever you see Jax these days, you also see Hollywood pursuing the ladies together, either in tandem or one after the other. If all those women accept the proposals of marriage they've been getting, we'll likely have Kymer's first group household soon!

Who have you seen on the street lately? Could it have been me? If so, do drop out of the clouds, say hello, and tell me what's shaking! I love to hear all about the doings of the neighborhood!

>> A VAMPIRE'S VIEW
By Vampire

Bonsoir, citizens of Phantassus. Allow me to introduce myself. My name, generic as it may seem, is Vampire. I was the first vampire on Kymer, arriving after many long years spent elsewhere outside of the Dreamscape. My journey on the Argo was a pleasant one, although much of my time was spent in the cabin and out of the sun. When the smooth motions of the ship slowed and finally were reduced to a gentle rocking in the port, I timidly opened the door, expecting to feel the pain of the sunlight my poor, vampiric skin cannot endure. But mon dieu, I felt no pain! I stepped into the full sunlight and felt its warm rays of light caress my face and skin. So many years had passed where I had longed to have that feeling again, and now, in this wonderful place of dreams, it has become my reality.

I kept a low profile for a while, hiding in small nooks and crannies of the city. Then I overheard some avatars talking about "ghosting" and soon mastered that skill. Without fear I explored the city again in perfect safety in the clouds. The daytime felt wonderful. I sensed only love from those around me, and listened to all the kind words being spoken. It was a commodity I had taken for granted in my mortal years outside the Dreamscape, and something I was exposed to very little of after I became a vampire. This place, this wondrous place, had brought back sweet memories long forgotten. Then I met Lestat. Mon cher with skin like the purest white marble, eyes like black onyx so deep I found myself lost within their loving embrace. Love was once more something I could call my own.

It was a few nights before Halloween and I was roaming Phantassus again. I heard a commotion at Blasted Heath and hurried there to find that two Acolytes had become vampires! This was not my doing, and surely not Lestat's, so who, I wondered, had done this?

I started my investigation. I remained in the clouds above the streets and watched as the number of vampires grew. Then I saw her, the beautiful one. Carmila. It seems that Lestat and I were not alone on this island after all; Carmila had been here all the time. There erupted a struggle between good and evil, vampires and knights. I remained neutral on this issue because I have always considered myself neither good nor evil. I live as I live, love as I love, do as I do. Oh, of course I popped down from the clouds every now and then with Lestat to have a bit of fun and a small "snack", but I was not afraid of the truly evil ones or of the Knights.

I watched the battle grow, watched Carmila's struggle, and finally her undoing. She and I are alike in that we are vampires, yet we are completely different. We belong to two different "breeds", if you will. I was deeply saddened to see her go.

And if we must see this whole ordeal as a lesson, let us not choose sides on one extreme of "good" or "bad", let us open our hearts and have sympathy for those who struggle within themselves and happiness for those who do not.

-Vampire

>> TURKEY TROT RACERS NEEDED
By Marianne G

The Bloodline is hosting a Turkey Trot on the 26th of November, a Sunday, at 5 PM WAT and need four teams of four players to race! We also will have betting on those races, so if you can't race, then come and cheer them on and place a bet!

All those who have a team ready to race around the fountain please contact Marianne G or BLD Stalker inworld or send us mail at 72007,221 or 76571,1241. We want serious racers only and it will cost you 200 Tokens (that's 50T per team member) to register! At stake is whatever the Oracles give us and a small portion of the gambling pot put up by the betting public.

On race day, those wishing to hear the live telecast of the race should appear in Ghost mode at South Fountain Center where the race will start and end and where a play by play will be announced during the event. All Betting winners will be announced in the CLARION and if you are not at the race, you can make arraignments to pick your winnings up later. Thanks all for your continued help in making the Bloodline events, events to remember!

>> CHAOS, Inc
By Marianne G

Was time for another new game, and we introduced Team Trivia on the 8th. Why should you suffer during a trivia game because your memory causes you to crash? Or perhaps, your memory just makes it hard for you to recall the answers. Now there's help. With team trivia, you get points if you or a team member are the first answers in! Sounds good, right? But where does the CHAOS come in? After so many trivia questions, we have everyone ESP the host and based on that order, we make up new teams. On a different team every time. If 9 people ESP in to play the next round, the 1st, 4th and 7th ESP in becomes a team, the 2nd, 5th and 8th, another and the 3rd, 6th and 9th the last team, or however it goes. This also makes your scores different after the first round or so, and you still have to work, you can't rely on your teammates for all the answers!

Winning tokens and attending the trivia were Trapper in first place with 62 points, Hera with 46 points, Keyser Soze with 43 points, TuNee with 41 points and Starshine with 38 points. Behind them with smaller shares of the pot were Gump6pt7, Damia, Feu Des Astres, Edo, Vestal, Version 1.1, Iluvater, RollsRoyce2, Lady Callahan, Heath, G Armarni, Michael age:8, Randy, Flyboy, Kethrey and Wolf Darkmane.

Pretty sure I got everyone in, thanks for playing, and hmmm, maybe we'll do some Boggle this week. Who knows!
